How to Eat Your Way to Healthier Hair

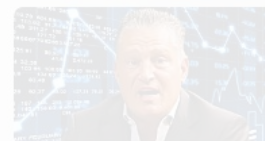

Story by Mia Brabham • Yesterday 10:53 PM

On a personal journey to become healthier a decade ago, Christine Cole reworked her entire diet. The now-certified nutrition aesthetic practitioner and vice president of sales at hair care company LOMA noticed a simultaneous transformation: She was slimming down, and the texture of her hair was looking luxurious.

Market Wizard Who Predicted 2022 Crash Shares Surprising New Forecast

As a professional in the hair care industry, Cole was extremely familiar with skinification, a conscientious formulation trend where skincare-inspired ingredients are included in hair care products. "If you see Act+Acre, Nutrafol, and Vegamour," says Cole, "they use skin grade-level ingredients in their hair care formulas because your scalp is skin, and your scalp absorbs faster than any other part of our body."

Besides these specifically designed clarifying and detoxing shampoos, which remove residue and buildup that clog pores and block hair from growing, Cole realized more than elevated ingredients are required to heal hair. "You could have the cleanest scalp," she explains, "but if you're not eating great and feeding that follicle, what good does it do?"

It turns out that beauty truly is more than skin deep, especially when it comes to luscious locks. To
